TWO WOMEN AT WAR.

perintendent of public instructions was introduced.

His speech did not suit his audience. He went back to the time of Columbus, and bored his hearers with a recapitulation of well-known historical facts having no particular bearing on the issues of the day, until they were well nigh exhausted. When he said "I will finish soon," there was a round of applause. Mr. Gaines will have to talk up to date if he wants to secure a hearing. He's no school-teacher.

When Superintendent Gaines had finally finished, the chairman introduced Governor Whitte. The women stretched their necks to get a good view of his face, expecting to see him flashing from his eyes, while the men listened for the first word, expecting to hear the most sanguine utterances. They were all disappointed. His face is mild and unassuming, and his speech was only made up of Populist doctrine of the mildest order.

Gov. Waite opened his speech by a reference to the alien and sedition laws. "These laws provided that anyone who should say anything against the government or president or the laws should be arrested. No man was to be arrested without process of law and all were to be entitled to a jury trial. The law was so contrary to the sentiment of the people and so like that of the monarchies that the old Federal party, which was responsible for the law, was swept out of power."

"There is positively no law which makes the receivers of railroads officers of the United States, but they are now considered officers of the government. Under this pretext they have created deputies and armed them and have given these men authority to make arrests without warrant of law. They take the men before a United States judge who sentences them to jail without a trial. There is nothing to prevent these judges in their discretion from fining a man $1,000,000 as well as $5 and sentence him to 1,000 years in jail as well as thirty."

"What must happen to parties which uphold such practices? They will go down as the old Federal party which passed the alien and sedition laws did. (Applause.)"

"Now it is proposed by the representatives of the Republican and Democratic parties in their convention assembled that we, the American people, cannot make our own money without first appealing to Europe and asking the permission of the Rothschilds."

"If such things had occurred when I was 15 years old, which is fifty years ago, the parties responsible for them would have met the same fate which my adjutant general did in Colorado—they would have been tarred and feathered." (Laughter.)

Gov. Waite then discussed labor troubles in the east and dwelt upon the fight at Homestead. He said that the working people were adjudged guilty of treason, while as a fact the Carnegie company was guilty of that offense in importing an armed force into the state, which is especially prohibited by the constitution. "And still," continued the speaker, "this man Carnegie is now on a visit to the holy land, where he would have met the same fate which my adjutant general did in Colorado—they would have been tarred and feathered." (Laughter.)

"I do not believe in the militia of a state fighting the United States troops. I do not believe in violence or strikes and the only hope of the people I can see is at the ballot box. There is only one danger—a great danger—of a bloody revolution before the wrongs of the people can be righted, but I pray that it may not come. I appeal to you my people to submit to wrong if necessary, but do no violence. Wait but a little while and you can right all your wrongs by the greatest force in this country—the ballot."

"The governor who preceded me—Governor Rount, was troubled a great deal by petitions. One time several men came to him to ask him to do something he had no right to do. The governor was not always particular in his choice of language. He listened to them a while and then said impatiently, 'You are always after me to do something—why in h—don't you vote?'

The governor discussed the question of woman suffrage and when he reached this point in his address he took a manuscript from his pocket which he continually referred to. "I am in favor of intelligent suffrage and so I am in favor of the enfranchisement of women. There is no argument in the coming campaign which will not apply to women as well as men. I have faith in man so why should I not have faith in women."

"We emancipated 4,000,000 black men by a terrible war and why should we now close the gates to 15,000,000 of our most intelligent people?"

He closed his speech by a recitation of the poem, Longfellow's "Ship of State."

"I close then," said the speaker, "a collection would be taken up and a committee was appointed for that purpose. They expected to get $50 but only $7.25 was raised. There had been too many collections already."

While the collection was being taken up W. E. Thomas sang "One of His Legs Longer than I." Really ought to be profaning it by a speech which no one wanted to hear.

Mrs. J. R. Hayne read her original poem, "Ashamed of Kansas."

Gov. Waite then came to the front and said: "For fear that I might be misunderstood when I said that I was not in favor of strikes, I want to say that when I was at home I wore the white ribbon which proclaimed that I was in sympathy with the strikers. As between organized labor and organized capital I am with organized labor every time."

Col. Ben Henderson was next introduced and made a short speech but the crowd was impatient and many left while he was talking, though he is one of the best speakers in the Populist ranks.

WANTS $75,000.

The State Sales Fourteen New York Insurance Companies for That Sum.

A renewal of the celebrated reciprocal tax insurance cases was filed in the district court yesterday afternoon against fourteen New York fire insurance companies by the state. In the name of Attorney General J. T. Little and Insurance Commissioner S. H. Snider.

The cases are to recover about $75,000, or about two per cent of the premiums received by the companies involved since they have established agencies in Kansas. Such tax is levied on foreign fire insurance companies doing business in New York, that goes towards the support of the local fire departments, and the plaintiffs in the case think that under the reciprocal clause of the Kansas insurance laws a similar tax can be collected from the New York companies operating in Kansas.

The amounts of premiums received by the fourteen companies since they have operated in Kansas, are shown to be as follows, from reports on file at the state insurance department:

Home Fire Ins. Co.	$1,679,808
Continental	1,645,741
Phoenix	1,089,889

GOT HER PET DRUNK

For Which Herman Crow Was Horse-Whipped on Kansas Avenue.

"I'll teach you to get my pet drunk!" said Florence Douglas of Smoky Row to Herman Crow last evening, as she applied a buggy whip vigorously over the latter's head. The affair occurred about 6 o'clock last evening at the southeast corner of Fifth and Kansas avenue.

It seems that Miss Douglas was married to Jack Morton last week, and before their honeymoon was over, she says that Herman Crow got her husband drunk. The horse-whipping last evening was the result.

Mrs. Morton, accompanied by Lillian Tack, were driving up Kansas avenue, when they saw Crow and Morton standing on the corner. Mrs. Morton jumped out of the buggy with the whip in hand and applied the butt end of it on her victim. Hot blows were such telling ones that the whip was broken. Crow's injuries were painful and bled profusely.

Officer Arterbridge was not far off when the assault occurred, and took Mrs. Morton to the city prison, where she put up $5 of Jack's money for her appearance in court this morning, which she forfeited.

THE STORY ABOUT LYONS

The O. R. C. Acting Very Disagreeably Toward Their Treasurer.

An investigation of the story about the arrest of Conductor J. W. Lyons shows that he has not yet been arrested.

A few days ago a committee of the O. R. C. called on Treasurer Edward Wilder and asked him if they could garnish the $210 which Lyons said in his state house speech the Santa Fe owed him. They said Lyons was treasurer of the grievance committee, and when they fired him out of their order, he refused to turn over the funds in his possession, about $700.

The committee was informed that under the recent order of Judge Child, well they could not garnish, and that their only recourse would be to have him arrested for embezzlement in the Lyon county district court at Emporia.
